Justification for course proposal:
Updating catalog description and prerequisites as part of broader restructuring of BA in Anthropology curriculum. After long discussions, CLS faculty arrived at the conclusion that ANTH 141 or Anth 146 provide ample exposure to the fundamentals of cultural anthropology preparing students to engage and appreciate specific issues addressed within the specialized field represented by this course,Urban Anthropology. The CLS faculty deemed it necessary to move away from a sequenced approach (represented by the current curricular structure) to a multi pathway approach (represented by the proposed curricular changes - see Form B submitted for BA in Anthropology (CLS concentration) engage the major curriculum.
Graduate students have always been eligible to take this, but had to be hand enrolled. Adding graduate student standing eliminates the need for office administrative staff to add graduate students manually.

Course Description: (Not to exceed 90 words and language should conform to catalog copy.)
Explore city life and urban dynamics through cross-cultural ethnographies. Understand the formation of urban spaces and how people navigate and/or negotiate ever shifting social, political, and economic priorities within it. Examine diverse factors shaping urban environments, urban governance, and coloring city dwellers' daily experiences. This course offers valuable insights into the practical realities of urban life.
